WHITE HOUSE OFFICIAL ATTACKS COURT

1 A White House official attacked a U.S. court ruling that blocked President Donald Trump's executive order on immigration as a "judicial usurpation of power" and said the administration was considering a range of options, including a new order. Sustained criticism of the judiciary from the White House comes amid concern among Democrats and legal scholars over Trump's view of the constitutional principle of judicial independence as the administration seeks to overcome legal setbacks to its travel ban issued on Jan. 27. It has also become the backdrop against which U.S. senators consider Trump's Supreme Court nominee, Judge Neil Gorsuch, for a lifetime appointment to the nation's highest court. REUTERS

MEXICANS VENT OVER TRUMP, OWN PRESIDENT

2 Thousands of protesters in more than a dozen Mexican cities took to the streets on Sunday to express their fierce opposition to U.S. President Donald Trump, portraying the new leader as a menace to both America and Mexico. Waving Mexicans flags and hoisting anti-Trump signs in both Spanish and English, some vulgar, many protesters also heaped scorn on their own president, deriding Enrique Pena Nieto as a weak leader who has presided over rampant corruption and violence at home. Trump and Pena Nieto have been locked in battle over their countries' deep ties for months, even before Trump won the presidency with promises to get tougher on immigration and trade from Mexico. Mexico fears Trump's policies could send Latin America's second biggest economy into crisis. REUTERS

STEINMEIER ELECTED GERMAN PRESIDENT

3 Former foreign minister Frank-Walter Steinmeier was elected Germany's president on Sunday, the 12th person to hold the largely ceremonial post in the post-war era. Steinmeier, a Social Democrat who had served as foreign minister until last month, won 931 of the 1,239 valid votes by lawmakers and representatives of Germany's 16 federal states. There 103 abstentions and 14 votes were invalid. After Bundestag president Norbert Lammert announced the results, all representatives held a standing ovation except for a few dozen members of the populist Alternative for Germany (AfD) party. ## JAZZ AND R&B SINGER AL JARREAU DIES AT 76

4 Jazz and R&B singer Al Jarreau, whose hits included "We're in This Love Together" and "Moonlighting," died on Sunday in Los Angeles at age 76. His Facebook page said Jarreau "passed away this morning, at about 6 a.m. LA time. He was in the hospital, kept comfortable by his wife, son, and a few of his family and friends." No cause of death was given. The seven-time Grammy winner had been hospitalized for exhaustion last week and was forced to cancel his remaining tour dates for 2017. Jarreau was considered one of jazz's greatest vocalists, with a mastery of scat singing and vocal percussion. REUTERS

High expectations for Massachusetts' marijuana industry

FLICKR

Do small businesses have a chance?

ERIN TIERNAN
@MetroNewYork
erin.tiernan@metro.us

As Massachusetts' marijuana market is poised to move from street corners to store fronts, investors are starting to see green — and it's not just the plants.

The Bay State will be the first on the East Coast to tap into the legal weed market and industry experts predict big payoffs. By 2020, marijuana sales in the state will top $1.1 billion and it will be a $21 billion market nationwide, according to market research data by New Frontier.

Long a hub for the tech and medical industries, Troy Dayton, CEO of the Arcview Group, which analyzes the marijuana markets, predicts Boston could soon become a hub for marijuana too.

"Unlike other places where cannabis is legal, Boston is within driving distance of many of the most populous places in America. This will make Boston the cannabis capital of the world in short order," he said.

The potential for this budding industry has not been lost on big-money investors.

The Yes on 4 campaign launched in 2014 with the goal of passing a referendum that would legalize recreational marijuana for adults over 21, allowing possession, growing and selling of the plant and infused products.

Over the two years it took, the campaign raised more than $6.4 million. Of that, 81 percent was funded by New Approach, a Washington-based pro-pot political action committee. And who is behind that money? A search of the group's IRS tax filings shows it's a group of billionaires with ties to Silicon Valley.

"Big pot," as it's been dubbed, has left its mark on other states where recreational marijuana is already legal. A recent report by the Denver Post revealed 20 percent of the city's retail market is owned by just 10 people.

But in Massachusetts, where the requirements on licenses and regulations on retail businesses have yet to be inked, pot proponents said they have the little guys in mind.

"We were very deliberate about making the adult-use industry more accessible for small businesses," Shaleen Title, a marijuana entrepreneur and an architect of referendum.

It's not easy going green

Most small businesses are finding that high costs are the biggest deterrents of getting into the pot game.

The national average cost for starting a marijuana dispensary is about $325,000 when you add up application and license fees and the cost to open, according to the 2016 Marijuana Business Factbook.

Massachusetts legalized medicinal marijuana in 2012, but to date only nine dispensaries have opened up statewide.

It's indicative of a process hampered by intense regulation, said Jeffrey Roos, CEO of Mass Medi Spa, a medicinal marijuana company that has been working to open dispensaries in Norwell and Nantucket for almost five years.

"Compliance itself is a full-time job — we have a compliance officer on payroll," he said.

"I think medical and recreational will both be highly regulated so you're not going to see any fly-by-night operations."

Legislature looks to gut Massachusetts pot law

Bills would cut allowed possession, place moratorium on infused products.

ERIN TIERNAN
@MetroNewYork
erin.tiernan@metro.us

The marijuana law will see some changes if some lawmakers get their way. FLICKR

When Massachusetts voters legalized recreational marijuana in November, it sparked a war in the legislature, where some lawmakers are bent on limiting the sale, use and cultivation of the intoxicating plant.

Pro-pot advocates have accused lawmakers of trampling on the will of the voters as bill after bill — 37 to be exact — has been filed to scale back the legalization rollout.

One bill, filed by Sen. William Brownsberger, D-Belmont, on behalf of a constituent, seeks wholesale repeal of the referendum that legalized pot.

"What we are worried about is bills that would really eviscerate what was passed in November," said Jim Borghesani, spokesman for the Yes on 4 campaign that lobbied for legalization. "It goes completely against the will of the people. You can't say you pledged to uphold the will of the people while at the same time filing bills that gut the very measure the people approved."

The referendum to legalize retail pot sales and possession and growing the plant for adults over 21 passed by more than 53 percent of those who voted.

Among other things, the bills would:

- Slash the amount of pot people over 21 can possess in their homes from 10 ounces to 2 ounces.
- Cut the number of plants people could grow from 12 down to six per household.
- Impose a two-year moratorium on the sale of marijuana-infused products at retail dispensaries.
- Give regulators the power to outright ban any product other than the leafy plant matter itself.

In Colorado, where recreational pot was legalized in 2012, infused products account for more than 50 percent of the market, state data showed.

Fourteen of these bills were filed by Sen. Jason Lewis, D-Winchester, a leader in the failed crusade to stop legalization, who has said the specifics should be left to the legislature to "responsibly, thoughtfully and safely implement a legal marijuana market in Massachusetts."

The legislature has already successfully pushed back the opening of retail dispensaries and the establishment of a Cannabis Control Commission by six months, something Borghesani also opposes.

"Lewis is a prohibitionist and his bills are reflecting his position," Borghesani said. "During the campaign, he opposed legalization just like he opposed med marijuana and just like he opposed the decriminalization of marijuana. Now he is doing his best to undo what voters approved overwhelmingly in November."

Medical Marijuana is used to treat the following conditions:
• HIV/AIDS • Glaucoma • ALS • MS • Hepatitis C • Parkinson's • Crohn's • Cancer and any other condition our doctor recommends.

With a medical card:

- The cost will be cheaper. In Colorado recreational strains sell for $35 an eighth while the same strain for medical patients is $100/oz[1];
- No tax on medical – a 12% tax on recreational at this point. Washington State has a 37% tax on their recreational products;
- A discount for medical and possible insurance coverage for it;
- You may be exempt from any taxes if you are a registered patient as in Washington State;[2]
- You may choose from a greater VARIETY, TYPE and STRENGTH of CBD and THC strains;

MEDICAL MARIJUANA IS AVAILABLE NOW.
- Recreational marijuana will not be sold in retail stores until January 2018.

TRUMP'S AMERICA

IF AT FIRST YOU DON'T SUCCEED

President Trump and Japan's Prime Minister Shinzo Abe hit the links Saturday in Florida. GETTY IMAGES

ELLIS HENICAN

Trump's America

Ellis Henican is a seasoned observer of the nation's political and social landscape. He has appeared as a commentator on CNN, MSNBC and Fox News. He is a former columnist at Newsday. Follow him @henican

In government as in golf, it's never too soon for a mulligan.

I can't report how many do-overs Donald Trump took on the links in Palm Beach, Florida, with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. Mar-a-Lago security men taped black plastic over the windows to block the news media's view. But this much is clear for anyone to see: An ever-growing roster of Trump slogans and promises is now being speed-edited by reality.

The most glaring one: White House staffers are frantically redrafting the botched Muslim ban blocked by a three-judge panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. The "brand new order" could be ready as early as today. But that's just a warm-up.

The big question going forward is who or what Trump's next mulligan will be. The "repeal and replace" of Obamacare, now sounding more and more like a rebrand? The president's impetuous Two Chinas policy, hardly mentioned since one chummy postelection phone call with the president of Taiwan? Is one of these the next oh-never-mind?

Could it be the truth-challenged national security advisor, Gen. Michael Flynn, who first insisted he didn't talk sanctions with the Russian ambassador — and now pleads selective memory loss? Is Gen. Flynn tomorrow's mulligan?

When it comes to necessary redos, there are so many ripe possibilities. The increasingly pricey border wall, which Mexico still won't pay for? The claim that 3 million "illegals" voted in an election that Donald Trump won. Any evidence yet? The sweeping crackdown on illegal immigration that will apply to — wait, who will it apply to? Anyone here without papers? Only serious criminals? Muslims from some nations or from many?

Everything is open to reinterpretation except for this: When you have a president who speaks by tweet and governs by gut emotion, no view is forever and no decision can't be undone.

It was fascinating, I thought, to watch the reaction when North Korea leader Kim Jong Un sent a special bread-and-butter gift to Trump and Abe's golf-and-get-to-know-you weekend — a mid-range ballistic missile into the Sea of Japan. "It won't happen" gave way immediately to the mildest platitude: "The United States of America stands behind Japan, its great ally, 100 percent, thank you."

Anyone ready to call another mulligan?

Boston braces for second blizzard this week

Schools closed Monday.

ERIN TIERNAN
@erintiernan
erin.tiernan@metro.us

DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN/METRO

Another day, another blizzard for Boston.

After a mild start to the winter, the second blizzard this week brought the promise of another foot of snow and prompted school closures across the state, including in Boston.

Snow totals of 9 to 13 inches, winds of more than 50 miles per hour and low visibility prompted Mayor Marty Walsh to "play it safe," he said, announcing the closure in a 4 p.m. news conference Sunday "out of the safety for our kids and also for keeping people off the roads."

Freezing rain and snow battered the city throughout the day Sunday, keeping accumulation low, but the storm promised to ramp up overnight as temperatures dipped below freezing.

The snow will be wet and heavy, making for a slushy and dangerous commute, Walsh said.

Anyone headed into the city Monday morning is advised to use public transportation and steer clear of the roads.

The T, which underwent a $100 million winter preparedness overhaul following its failures during a spate of February blizzards in 2015, passed its first major test during last week's blizzard. While there were a few delays here and there, trains kept running and there were no major service interruptions.

With another storm predicted to hit the region Thursday, Walsh said keeping roads clear was a top priority, and had the city's 600 pieces of snow-fighting equipment out in force Sunday.

"In 2015 we got caught off guard a little bit and took a little longer to open up the streets the way we needed to," Walsh said, referring to the spate of storms that crippled the city two Februaries ago. "This year we are trying to stay ahead of that."

In the interest of keeping streets clear, he warned people not to throw snow into the streets.

"We'll have code enforcement out there to make sure businesses and people aren't out there throwing snow on the street," he said.

Walsh warned residents to take it easy while shoveling Monday and take small shovelfuls.

He asked people and businesses to dig out hydrants and handicap spaces near their property.

Earlier this week, Boston weathered the storm with no major power outages or other issues, but the wet, heavy snow expected this time could cause some problems, Walsh said.

Mischa Barton crashed a U-Haul into an apartment building

Poor, poor Mischa Barton.

The erstwhile star of "The O.C." has had her fair share of troubles lately.

First, there was that whole thing where she claimed she was drugged with GHB after she was hospitalized for acting super bizarrely in her backyard.

Now, TMZ is reporting that the actress literally drove her U-Haul truck into an apartment building. Okay, girl.

Barton apparently moved out of her West Hollywood apartment last Wednesday, and on Friday was driving to another building in the area when she uh, misjudged the height of the carport and crashed the U-Haul into the top of it.

So, was she just driving around her U-Haul around for two days aimlessly before moving into her new spot? We could think of a few better uses of our time — rewatching "50 Shades Darker" on an infinite loop, perhaps. That would be better. More tortuous, but better.

Good luck to Barton, and honestly? We hope she gets well soon because she is kind of a mess.

Um, are Amber Rose and Wiz Khalifa back together?

Amber Rose and Wiz Khalifa are probably back together.

The pair, who split in September 2015 after a little over a year of marriage, were snapped doing all kinds of kissing and canoodling at Clive Davis' pre-Grammys bash. It's like a school dance up in here!

Rose was very recently linked to Val Chmerkovskiy, who she met on the set of "Dancing with the Stars." The two dated for five months, and during that time, they were also extremely PDA-heavy. I think it's just Rose's thing, which is chill.

I suppose it's entirely possible that this is just the way Rose and Khalifa co-parent, but I'd say it's unlikely. So, congratulations, maybe?

David Beckham takes his kids out on the town in NYC

David Beckham had the best time with his brood in New York City.

The father of four enjoyed a day out with his family this weekend, taking Brooklyn, 17, Romeo, 14, Cruz, 11 and Harper, 5 to the Natural History Museum, and snapping a bunch of cute pics for Instagram on the way.

David had formerly revealed how important his family is, telling Hello: "My family is the biggest accomplishment I have. I'm so proud of Victoria and my children; they're my greatest achievement.

The family hang was surely a nice reprieve from the soccer star's lil email scandal: Earlier this month, Beckham's emails were hacked, but they mostly just revealed that the dude is super thirsty for a knighthood.

I mean, a knighthood is just a meaningless title, but do you, boo?

Tokyo-cum-New York ramen-ologist Ivan Orkin's Ivan Ramen is coming to Boston — for one night. Ken Oringer and Tony Messina's UNI at the Eliot Hotel will host the pop-up Mar. 6, offering Ivan's classic Tokyo Shio Ramen and quirky twists on Japanese street food a la carte.

Notably on the pop-up agenda: triple pork, triple garlic mazemen, a no-broth ramen, heavy on the flavor and accouterments. The New York Times' Pete Wells deemed Ivan's rendition to be "a form Mr. Orkin has mastered more fully than anyone in the city." (He also named the Lower East Side location a critic's pick.) So, like, maybe order two or three.

Ivan's cheeky renditions of street snacks, like wagyu beef katsu sandwiches, should feel at home at UNI, where Messina's slinging White Castle burger rolls (with secret sauce), kimchee chicken and waffles and French onion soup with wagyu sukiyaki.

While the pop-up menu items will be available for one night only, you can still slurp the mazemen during Friday and Saturday's late night service (10:30 p.m.-1 a.m.) through March.

Michael Cera is not into smartphones

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Voicing Robin in "The Lego Batman Movie" opens Michael Cera up to a particular line of questioning: comic-book talk. But he's not a comic-book nerd. He is, however, a movie nerd. The "Arrested Development" alum is a regular at New York City repertory houses. Lately he's been bingeing the films by Abbas Kiarostami, Mike Leigh and Rainer Werner Fassbinder. As it happens, there's a lot that Cera — who just had two films at Sundance ("Lemon" and "Person to Person") and will soon be seen in the next season of "Twin Peaks" — can talk about.

Is there a specific reason why you see so many movies? Would you want to curate your own film programs at some point?
I don't know. I don't feel like I'm a good organizer. [Laughs] I tend to enjoy other people's efforts.

So you're just seeing them because you like it.
Yeah. I don't see it as productive in any way for me. It's just enjoyment. I feel like it's a school, in a way. It's kind of an unconscious philosophical education or something. When you spend time with people who are so connected to their own outlook on the world, and especially if they have a poetic one, it's a really good feeling. It's like soul food. You learn from it in ways you don't even track.

A nerd of a different kind

Are you also a comic-book person?
I'm not. That passed me by. I think I would have gotten into it if I had a friend growing up who was into it. But I just never did. It never came my way.

I don't think my brain has enough space to be crazy about comics. It's too full already with movies and music and books.
There's a blizzard of content out there. There's only so many hours in the day.

Exactly. This is why I've never seen "The Sopranos."
I know! People look at you like you just don't care about anything if you haven't seen a show they love. You see this disgust — like, "You are so much less than I thought you were." [Laughs]

I know this look all too well.
It's like you told them you don't know basic addition. Sorry! We've led different lives!

There's so much access to movies nowadays, but I worry not enough people take advantage of that. Technology has shrunk our attention spans.
Rosario Dawson [who voices Batgirl] has this fountain of knowledge. She can regurgitate information in a really impressive way. It made me feel so ashamed. If I was trying to give you all the information I was trying to convey, I would probably just send you a link. [Laughs]

Tech can be so bad.
I don't have a smartphone and everyone always asks me, "How do you get around?" The old way! [Laughs] That kind of baffles people, not having a GPS in your hand at all times.

Sam Trammell talks being a homewrecker on 'This Is Us'

Three is definitely a crowd.

If you watched last week's episode of "This Is Us," you witnessed firsthand how Ben, played by "True Blood" actor Sam Trammell, begins to stir up trouble in Rebecca (Mandy Moore) and Jack's (Milo Ventimiglia) blissful marriage when he asks Rebecca to sing with his band on an East Coast tour. In the previews for this week, we discover that the pair used to be a couple — a shocking revelation for fans as well as Jack.

We chatted with Trammell, who is based in Los Angeles, about causing conflict between Rebecca and Jack on the show, making the move from music to acting and why "This Is Us" has been such a hit with audiences.

How does it feel to play the character who's getting in between TV's most adorable couple?
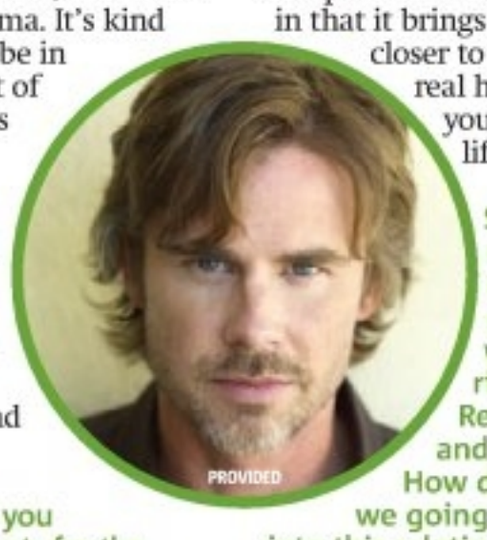
It's terrifying, frankly. They're so good together. I have no idea how people are going to receive my character, but that's great drama. It's kind of fun to be in the midst of their lives because they do have a precious thing. Every relationship has its ups and downs.



PROVIDED

What do you think counts for the success of "This Is Us" so far? People really love it.
I know. I think it's a combination of fantastic writing, great actors and characters and people relating to the relationships on the show. I think the writers do such a good job of writing things that are relatable for the audience. It's just the highest quality stuff.

With everything going on in our country, why is a show like "This Is Us" important?
It's important because it's really about your local life, in a way. It's about your relationships. It's about the people who are right in front of you. There is a lot of political unrest right now and anxiety right now. It reminds us of what's really important, which is the people that are right in front of us — our spouses, our kids. It's an escape in an ironic way, in that it brings you closer to your real home and your real life.

So last night's episode got me worried for Rebecca and Jack. How deep are we going to dive into this relationship between her and Ben?
Obviously, I can't say too much, but we go on tour and you see how it affects the relationship. Again, I can't say too much. I can say that I got to sing with Mandy Moore. It was really incredible to be singing with her on stage because she's the real deal.

Segueing into that, your character's a musician. Do you have a musical background?
I was playing music long before I was an actor. I was in bands when I was a teenager, ever since I was 13 — rock cover bands. I played the cello and piano. Strummed instruments is sort of what I was drawn to.

How did you make that transition from musician to actor?
It was in college. A guy who's now a musician, who was an actor then, said, "Oh, you should audition for a play" and so I [did]. It was a real moment of "Wow, this is so exciting and amazing." Then, I was in my last semester at Brown. I just decided that I'm going to pursue that, so I moved to New York with no connections and not knowing any people. I took a bus and started from the ground up.

What do you like to do in your spare time when you're not doing a show?
One of my favorite things to do is to drive up north and go surfing in the early morning when it's still dark. You paddle out just when it gets light. It's a little cold, but that's when the waves are the best, so I like to do that. I like to play music. I have two boys who pretty much take up all the rest of my time.

Holocaust education takes flight through 'Butterfly Project'

ILZE MILLER US EMBASSY LATVIA

Using art to teach students the importance of empathy, compassion and standing up against injustice.

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

As we embark on a sociopolitical era defined by hate and bigotry, seizing the opportunity to teach students the value of empathy and compassion has never been more important.

But with an education system that focuses more on performance assessments, especially in the core subjects of reading, math and science, this idea often goes by the wayside, explains educator and artist Cheryl Rattner Price.

She partnered with documentary filmmaker, Joe Fab to create a movie about "The Butterfly Project," a San Diego program she's been involved with that inspires students to paint and display ceramic butterflies — one for each of the 1.5 million children killed during the Holocaust. The two hope to ignite a conversation around their main mission: making a Holocaust education mandatory nationally.

It's a broad education, and one that extends far beyond the religious realm, explains Fab. "It's a very human issue with lessons that are widely applicable," he continues. "It has to do with shaping students' character and growing global citizens."

By taking the lessons of the Holocaust out of the textbook, the interactive project, which has already been rolled out in 20 states, aims to allow students to connect with the subject matter on a more personal level.

The exercise of painting each butterfly, while looking at a picture of the child and reading through a card of their information creates something incredibly meaningful for the students, Price explains.

The project is meant to set the context and have students understand, "this is someone just like you. This child that you're painting a butterfly for is someone you can identify with. They had a life where they had challenges just like you, and then everything turned on them," she adds. "We're helping participants to understand that they're acting as a voice for the child that no longer has one."

In the end, it's immersive projects like these that help students to truly understand and reflect on what it's like to be part of a marginalized and unprotected community, she adds.

"It's also a reminder that regular people have to be aware of what's going on around them and protect the good things they have — the culture, the country, the values, the morals —all of those things have to be guarded." says Fab. "They can't just be taken for granted."

Network your way to the top

Expert tips for building and maintaining professional connections

SARA FEINSTEIN
@SaraBFeinstein
sara.feinstein@metro.us

ISTOCK

We all know the saying, "it's not what you know; it's who you know."

But Ivan Misner, founder and chairman of BNI, the world's largest business networking organization, has an entirely different outlook: "It's how well you know them," he says.

"Networking is about cultivating relationships with people, not just doing transactions," he explains.

Using this approach, Misner walked us through some tips for being a more effective networker.

Don't jump the gun

Forget the expression, "it never hurts to ask," says Misner. "It totally hurts to ask — if you ask too soon." Before you abruptly hand somebody your card and ask if they want to do business with you or be part of your professional network, you need them to know who you are, what you do, and that you're good at it, explains Misner. He calls it the VCP process — visibility, credibility, profitability — and you can only begin to "profit," or in other words, gain a connection or referral, after you've passed the first two stages.

Connect on a personal level

After connecting with somebody you'd like to add to your network, you should immediately set up a one-to-one meeting where you get to know each other better, says Misner. To ensure a meaningful visit, he suggests exchanging and talking through a list of GAINS: goals, accomplishments, interests, networks and skills. The technique is extremely helpful when it comes to understanding who the other person is, he says, and "the more you know about them personally, in a professional context, the better the connection you can make."

Show interest

"It's so much more important to be interested than interesting," says Misner. "When you show interest in someone else, you're much more likely to be remembered." You should be asking questions like, "What's your target market? and "What do you love about what you do?" If they do eventually open up to you, he suggests concluding by asking "What are some of the biggest challenges you have in your business?"

"That's your opportunity to act on being a great networker," he adds, by recognizing their challenges and connecting them to somebody who could help them out.

The fix is in: How easy is it to rig sports in the United States in 2017?

The potential for scandal is great in the NHL and UFC.

@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

The New England Patriots' miraculous comeback to beat the Atlanta Falcons in Super Bowl LI last week was so incredible it was as if a higher power was pulling the strings.

Conspiracy theorists had a field day in the immediate aftermath of what will go down as one of, if not the greatest Super Bowl of all time. Those in the tinfoil hats pointed out that the Falcons hardly attempted to burn the clock late in the game, and that Fox — which broadcast the game — posted a graphic before New England won that read, "New England Patriots — wins Super Bowl with touchdown." (Likely just poor grammar from a production assistant).

The Super Bowl truthers also claim that James White's knee was down before he scored the game-winning TD, and the truly nutty believe President Donald Trump and even Russian President Vladimir Putin had their fingerprints on the game. After all, Trump is buddy-buddy with Patriots owner Robert Kraft, and both Trump and Kraft have a history with Putin (Putin once stole one of Kraft's Super Bowl rings, so last week's win was reimbursement).

As fun as those theories are, football is likely the most difficult game in all of American pro sports to rig.

Metro recently spoke with Joe Gagliano, author of the new book "No Grey Areas," about how difficult it would be to rig a pro football game and how easy (or hard) it would be to fix other major sports in the U.S.. Gagliano financed, orchestrated and was later indicted for his role in one of the most prominent point-shaving scandals in U.S. history in the Arizona State basketball case of the 1990s.

New York Rangers goaltender Henrik Lundqvist. GETTY IMAGES

Football

As much as Patriots haters would like it to not be the case, Gagliano believes the Super Bowl was on the up and up.

"In football, you've got 11 guys on the field," Gagliano told Metro. "Even if you had a quarterback in your pocket it'd be next to impossible, and you're just not going to get an NFL quarterback because they're just so highly compensated. There's just no way to motivate a quarterback to fix a game because they're already making so much money.

"You're not going to get a college quarterback either, because if he throws two or three interceptions in the first quarter of a game — the coach is going to yank him."

Even kickers, who are paid significantly less than QBs but have a direct influence on game point totals, would have a tough time "rigging" a contest, according to Gagliano.

"The kicker needs to be in a situation where he's going to directly impact the line," Gagliano said. "It's really difficult to get to that point. He has no control over how well his offense or defense is playing. If I was a kicker and I was on the take, I know I could not control my own destiny."

Basketball

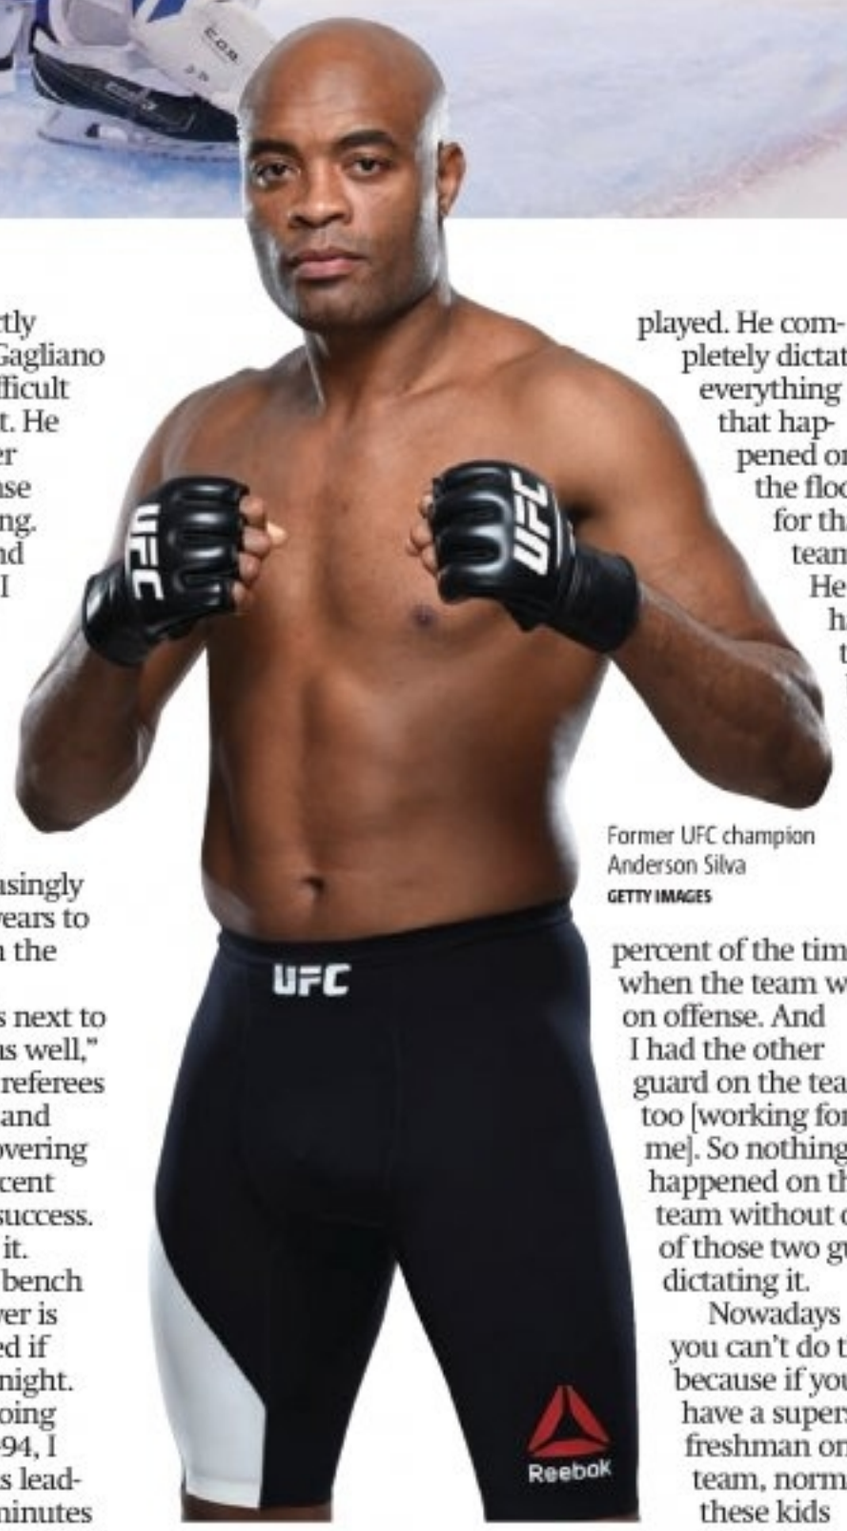
Gagliano's cash cow was basketball, but he says it has become increasingly difficult over the years to rig what occurs on the court.

"In the NBA it's next to impossible today as well," he said. "A couple referees have tried to do it and even they were hovering around the 70 percent mark in terms of success. It's so tough to do it. Even a lower-paid bench player — that player is going to get yanked if he's having a bad night.

"When I was doing this thing in 1993-94, I had a guy who was leading the NCAA in minutes played. He completely dictated everything that happened on the floor for that team. He had the ball 80 percent of the time when the team was on offense. And I had the other guard on the team too [working for me]. So nothing happened on that team without one of those two guys dictating it.

Nowadays you can't do that because if you have a superstar freshman on a team, normally these kids are one year and done. They're playing for NBA scouts. And there's so much money in front of them that … there's no reason for them to go to the dark side."



Former UFC champion Anderson Silva
GETTY IMAGES

Hockey

Team sports are obviously much more difficult to fix than individual sports (boxing, track and field, tennis) because of the number of parties that need to be involved, but Gagliano does believe that the NHL is susceptible to scandal.

"I think if you get a goalie in the twilight of his career it could be possible," he said. "These guys don't make a lot of money relative to the other sports. Even if you make $1 million a year, your career is typically only lasting five or six years in the NHL, and you're paying taxes, and you're building up a lifestyle — that money seems to go pretty quickly.

"So, you get a higher-profile game on a Saturday or Sunday, and you have the goalie put three to four goals through his wickets in the first period, and you bet the over. You bet over 4½ goals, five goals — and you can probably cash your ticket at that point."

MMA

The most popular sport with the most red flags in the U.S. is mixed martial arts, according to Gagliano.

"It has the potential to be as corrupt as possible," he said. "You look at that sport as a whole, you look at these kids — not making a lot of money. You look at the lifespan of an athlete in that sport, then you put a betting line on it? These kids are getting their brains pounded in, and there's not a big payday there at all."

"You look at a guy like Anderson Silva — pound for pound the best fighter in the UFC for years. But he was constantly arguing and was in bitter battles with Dana White and the UFC where he thought he deserved more money and the UFC didn't want to pay him more money."

BU and Harvard set for Beanpot final

The Bruins have a pair of prospects who will be playing in tonight's game.

RICH SLATE
@RichSlate
sports@metro.us

Harvard will be seeking its first Beanpot title since 1993 on Monday at the Garden. GETTY IMAGES

For an event that happens every year and is steeped in so much tradition, it is still surprising that Boston University (18-7-2) and Harvard (15-5-2) last met in a Beanpot final on Feb. 9, 1998. The Terriers won that night, 2-1, in overtime but the Crimson will be bidding for their first Beanpot title since 1993 when the two teams meet once again on Monday night (7:30, NESN) at TD Garden. Normally, you'd expect that BU would be a heavy favorite. However, both clubs are two of the best in the country this season as the Terriers are currently ranked third in the latest USCHO.com Top-20 poll and the Crimson come in one spot behind them at No. 4.

More than any other NHL team, you can bet that the Bruins (27-23-6) will be paying close attention to the Beanpot final and not just because it's being played at their home building. Boston has a pair of prospects on both BU and Harvard: sophomore defenseman Charlie McAvoy (3 goals, 13 assists, plus-4) and sophomore forward Jakob Forsbacka-Karlsson (11 goals, 14 assists, plus-8) for the Terriers along with sophomore forward Ryan Donato (11 goals, 10 assists, plus-7) and junior defenseman Wiley Sherman (7 assists, plus-10) for the Crimson.

The teams have already met once this season although it was awhile ago — a few days before Thanksgiving. BU beat Harvard, 5-3, on Nov. 22 at Agganis Arena.

The Crimson got to their first Beanpot final since 2008 by outlasting Northeastern (11-12-5), 4-3, last Monday at the Garden. The Terriers took the nightcap with a 3-1 victory over their archrivals from BC (18-9-2). BU lost to BC 1-0 in overtime in last year's Beanpot final but they do have some recent title history with a 4-3 overtime win over Northeastern in the 2015 Beanpot final.

Harvard is happy to reach this point since they are usually relegated to the 5 p.m. opener and then the consolation round game the following Monday — two contests that are lightly attended to say the least.

"It'll be cool to come out for warmups and there will be more than seven people in the stands," admitted Crimson senior forward Alexander Kerfoot who had a goal and assist in the win versus the Huskies.

Conversely, when you go to Boston University you expect to be playing for many trophies in prime time matchups all seasonlong. The Terriers' win over the Eagles last week was actually their first in a decade against them in a Beanpot.

"We limited their opportunities," said Terriers head coach Dave Quinn. "They were pinching, stretching people and taking chances. I thought we did a really good job of recognizing it."

Local college hockey fans can only hope that a game that has been so long in the making lives up to the hype that you would expect from two of the real NCAA title contenders this spring.

Aries Working hard and building strong relationships with your peers will promote popularity and a stellar reputation. Use your talent to engage in something you enjoy.

Taurus Business deals and prospects will highlight your day. Networking or getting more involved in groups that interest you will be important when it comes to progress.

Gemini Your best financial gains will come through hard work, finding solutions to existing problems and exploring new ways to press forward with your responsibilities.

Cancer You may not be eager to travel, but your curiosity will get the better of you. Indulge in community and cultural events to become aware of new possibilities.

Leo Check out your career options. An opportunity will tempt you to make a move. Revamp your résumé, update your skills and set sail for a chance to live your dream.

Virgo Keep close tabs on your investments, personal belongings and responsibilities if you want to avoid criticism and an unnecessary loss. Protect against injury.

Libra Don't reveal too much about what you are up to. Use your intelligence and ability to persuade others to trust you in order to avoid interference.

Scorpio Focus on creativity and your desire to expand an interest. Don't invest too much cash until you are sure you want to follow through with your plans.

Sagittarius Don't divulge personal secrets to your peers. Someone will take advantage of you emotionally or try to manipulate you into doing something you shouldn't.

Capricorn Travel and educational pursuits are highlighted. The rewards you receive due to the research and information you gather will lead to praise.

Aquarius Change will bring positive results. Buckle down and get things done that will give you the freedom you need to live your dream. Make romance a priority.

Pisces Get past emotional confusion by asking pertinent questions, gathering the facts and being honest regarding your opinions and motives. EUGENIA LAST
